RULERS OF ENGLAND
THE SUBJECT OF
A SERMON

Some writers contend that the word "king" is derived from the exclamation, "I can." The person who was confident that he could accomplish results was made leader. In no family of the earth has it been more true than in the present reigning house of Great Britain. The making of a small island into a world power in literature, commerce and influence of state has been no work of chance or favor. Ability and steadfastness of purpose have been required in measure as abundant as the task has been great. The story of the conquering of self, of the overcoming of almost unsurmountable barriers needed to enable the Norman House to rule the England of today is the theme of the Sunday night sermon in the First Presbyterian church. Music of an attractive nature will be given.

FAMILY QUARREL
AIRED IN COURT

A family jar was aired this morning in the municipal court when Alex Lee was brought to trial on the charge of battery. Mrs. Lee was the complaining witness and alleged that her husband struck her several times last Thursday night. In summing up the case, the judge stated that in his belief the indulgence of both parties in liquor was the cause for all of their trouble. He also said that the city could not condone disturbances between man and wife any more than it could those between strangers. The defendant promised to keep the peace and the case was dismissed.
